

The ownership of newspapers and television and radio stations is already concentrated in a few conglomerates. More, rather than less, government regulation is needed to give the public access to diverse news sources. Any decision made by the FCC about this matter will need more time for information to get out to the public, and more time for meaningful public input. This has the potential for becoming a major scandal, if quick deals are made with high-powered companies.